(2) Factual intelligence shall be compiled in National Intelligence Digests covering foreign countries, areas, or special subjects as appropriate.

(3) These Digests shall be in the form of intelligence encyclopedias recording all available factual data in such form as shall best meet the specific requirements of the individual agencies in the development of their staff intelligence.

(4) The editing, publication, maintenance and dissemination of these Digests shall be the responsibility of the Director of Central Intelligence.

(5) The initial production of chapters or sections of the National Intelligence Digests shall be charged to those departments or agencies of the Government which, by agreement with the Director of Central Intelligence, are best qualified to assume the production responsibility by reason of their intelligence requirements and production capabilities.

(6) Departments or agencies to be called on for contributions to these Digests shall include agencies other than those represented on the Intelligence Advisory Board.

(7) The Director of Central Intelligence shall make such collection requests as are necessary for the proper development and maintenance of the Digests.

b. Current Intelligence.

c. Staff Intelligence.

(1) Staff intelligence is that intelligence prepared by any department or agency through the process of full evaluation and interpretation designed to meet the specific requirements of the department or agency concerned. It is prepared without responsibility to any other agency or organization and is based only on that current factual or staff intelligence available to it.

(2) Each agency shall produce such staff intelligence as may be necessary to meet the requirements of its particular department.

3. The research facilities maintained by each agency shall be adequate to accomplish efficiently and promptly, on behalf of all intelligence agencies, the intelligence production tasks allocated to them under the foregoing provisions. 1. The following overall policies and objectives are established for the coordination of the production of intelligence.
2. In order that all facilities of the Government may be utilized to their capacity and the responsibilities of each agency may be clearly defined in accordance with its mission, dominant interest, and capabilities, the whole field of intelligence production is divided into the following four categories, and responsibilities are allocated as indicated:

- a. Basic Intelligence.

- (1) Basic intelligence is that factual intelligence which results from the collation of encyclopedic information of a more or less permanent or static nature and general interest which, as a result of evaluation and interpretation, is determined to be the best available.

- (2) An outline of all basic intelligence required by the Government shall be prepared by the CIG in collaboration with the appropriate agencies in the U.S. [REDACTED] This outline shall be broken down in such manner that the various chapters, sections, and subsections thereof can be allocated as production and maintenance responsibilities to CIG or those agencies of the Government which are best qualified by reason of their intelligence requirements, production capabilities and dominant interest to assume the production and maintenance responsibility. When completed, this outline shall be submitted to the IAB for comment.

- (3) This basic intelligence shall be compiled and maintained to cover foreign countries, areas or broad special subjects as appropriate. It will be distributed to the agencies in such form as best meets their individual requirements.

- (4) These compilations shall record all essential basic data in such form as shall best meet the specific requirements of the several individual agencies in the development of their staff intelligence. Their maintenance is a continuing process.

(5) The Director of Central Intelligence shall be responsible for coordinating the production and maintenance and for accomplishing the editing, publication, and dissemination of these intelligence compilations, and shall make such requests on the agencies as are necessary for the proper development and maintenance of the agreed program.

(6) Departments or agencies to be called on for contributions to this undertaking shall include agencies other than those represented in the IAB.

b. Current Intelligence.

(1) Current intelligence is that spot information or intelligence of all types and forms of immediate interest and value to operating or policy staffs which is used by them without the delays necessary for complete evaluation or interpretation.

(2) The CIG and the several agencies shall produce and disseminate such current intelligence as may be necessary to meet their own internal requirements or interagency responsibilities.

(3) Interagency dissemination of current intelligence shall be based on interagency agreement and will be in accordance with the dissemination policies established by the NIA.

c. Staff Intelligence.

(1) Staff intelligence is that intelligence prepared by any department or agency through the process of correlation and interpretation of all intelligence material available to it in order to meet the specific requirements and responsibilities of the department or agency concerned.

(2) Each intelligence agency has the ultimate responsibility for the preparation of such staff intelligence as its own department shall require. It is recognized that the staff intelligence of each of the departments must be broader in scope than any allocations of collection responsibility or recognition of dominant interest might indicate. In fact, the full foreign intelligence picture is of interest in varying degrees at different times to each of the departments. At the same time it is recognized that this full foreign intelligence picture, both current and basic, as it may pertain to any foreign country or area, can not be best developed by any one agency alone. The Director of Central Intelligence has been appointed and the CIG created to ensure, through coordination and its assigned operations, the fullest possible development of the foreign intelligence picture.

(3) The Director of Central Intelligence shall conduct a continuing program of coordination designed to relieve each agency of the necessity of developing intelligence in fields or on subjects not of its dominant interest, and to enlist the assistance of each agency having dominant interest in supplying the required intelligence studies in the most useful form.

(4) Any agency may call upon the Director of Central Intelligence to supply from CIG or agency resources such special intelligence estimates as it may require, but which do not naturally fall within its own fields of dominant interest. In making these special production requests, call shall be made on CIG or the agency or agencies in accordance with their dominant interest and production capabilities. Until more specifically defined, dominant interests shall be considered generally to follow the current allocation of collection responsibility.

(5) CIG and the agencies shall exchange information on projects and plans for the production of staff intelligence for purposes of coordination.

(6) It shall be normal practice that staff intelligence of one agency is available to the other intelligence agencies permanently represented on the IAS.

4. Strategic and National Policy Intelligence. (Hereafter to be known as National Intelligence.)

(1) National Intelligence is that staff intelligence produced by the Director of Central Intelligence.

(2) The Director of Central Intelligence shall receive promptly from the intelligence agencies such basic, current, and staff intelligence produced by them as he may require in the performance of his authorized mission, and which he shall consider in the development of national intelligence.

(3) The Director of Central Intelligence shall through inter-agency agreement cause such estimates, reports and periodic briefs or summaries to be prepared by the individual departments or agencies in their fields of dominant interest as may be necessary in the production of actually undertaken intelligence reports or estimates.

3. The research facilities required by any agency to process its own current and staff intelligence shall be sufficient to satisfy each agency's individual needs after giving full cognizance to the facilities of the other agencies. Each agency shall endeavor to maintain sufficient research facilities not only to accomplish the intelligence production tasks allocated to it directly under the foregoing provisions, but also to provide such additional intelligence reports or estimates within its field of dominant interest as may be necessary to satisfy the requirements of the other agencies under such allocations.

4. Implementation. Assumption of responsibilities as allocated herein shall be effected progressively and rapidly under the coordination of the Director of Central Intelligence.
